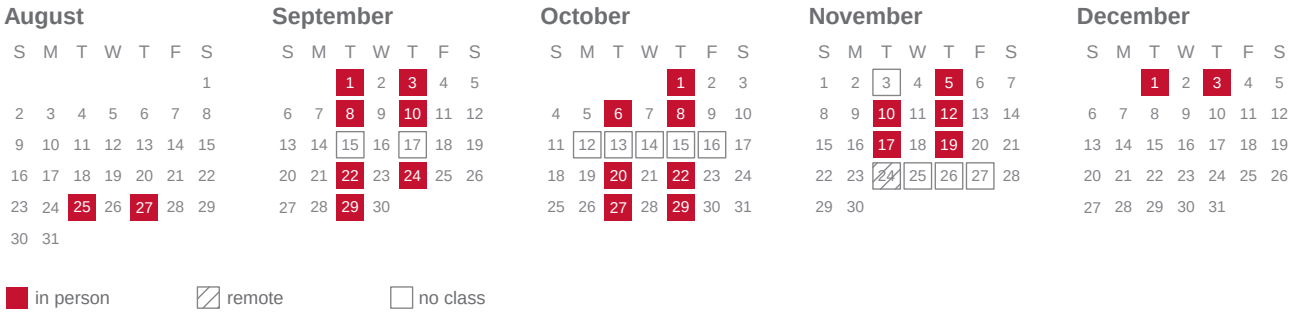
Prerequisites: NONE



Why are Americans so divided — and is the premise even true? We spend a month on what political science actually knows, then the semester is yours: student teams pick the topics, assign the readings, and run the room.

01 Assessment

The course grade will be a weighted average of the following components:

Assignment	Percent of Final Grade
Attendance	25%
Discussion Board (before each class)	15%
Student Led Topics	9%
Surveys (3: intake, midterm, evaluation)	2%
Book Review (Slides + Presentation)	12%
Op-Ed Project (Draft + Review + Final)	20%
Group Policy Brief	17%

02 Due Dates

Assignment	Due Date
Discussion board post	9:00 a.m., each class day
Surveys (3)	August 26, October 7, final week
Op-ed topic, on the board	September 15 (subject), 17 (replies)
Op-ed, first draft	September 21
Op-ed peer review	September 25
Op-ed final draft	September 28
Book Review (slides)	November 23
Group Project	December 1/3
Group Project reflection	December 4

03 The Essentials

- Before every class: one short discussion-board post, due 9:00 a.m., in Canvas. Two more fall in the no-class week of September 15, where the class settles op-ed subjects.
- Attendance is 25%. The first three absences cost almost nothing; four to six is where a semester goes wrong.
- Late work costs one point per hour, but never drops below 50%. The op-ed rough draft (September 21) is the one deadline with no exceptions:

it loses 10% immediately, then 1% per hour, down to the same 50% floor, because two classmates are waiting on it.
- Devices stay in bags. Non-class use of a laptop or phone means being marked absent for that session.
- Surveys and their screenshot receipts run through Canvas, under Assignments.

04 The Full Syllabus

Everything else — the week-by-week schedule with all readings, assignment details, and every policy — lives in the full syllabus:
